

The Editorial Team behind the Journal

This special issue of the Journal of Community Safety and Well-Being proudly recognizes and celebrates the Contributing Editor Community.

First introduced in April 2021, the Contributing Editor Community (CEC) emerged as part of a thoughtful evolution in the journal's editorial structure. The model was designed to build on the strengths and longstanding commitment of the original editorial team, while expanding to include a broader, more global, and more diverse group of editors. It reflects a shared vision to foster meaningful collaboration, strengthen thought leadership, and ensure the journal remains responsive to the communities it serves.

Since its inception, the CEC has become integral to the journal's success. By carefully stewarding the peer review process and building networks that connect new authors and reviewers, this incredible group plays a vital role in upholding the publication's quality, integrity, and relevance.

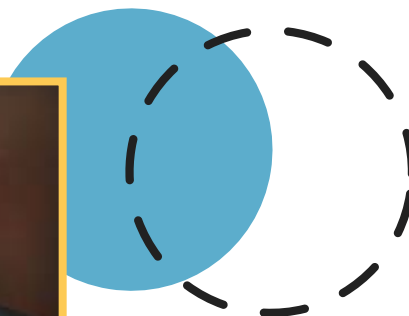

Their contributions extend well beyond formal editorial responsibilities. By championing diverse perspectives and elevating a wide range of voices, the CEC advances an inclusive and dynamic global dialogue on community safety and well-being.

The dedication, insight, and generosity of time demonstrated by this community continue to strengthen the journal's impact and reach. Their leadership remains central to the ongoing evolution and success of the Journal of Community Safety and Well-Being, and it is with great pride that this remarkable community is recognized and celebrated.
